

SEATTLE UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW CORPORATE INTERN PROGRAM

Today's law students are interested in real-world corporate experience, and the demands on in-house counsel are increasing. A legal part-time intern can assist your team and allow you to focus on what matters the most – growing your company.

At Seattle University School of Law, we are committed to helping you hire capable and professional legal interns. Law students may work up to 20 hours per week during the academic year for reasonable compensation, and full-time during the summer.

Through real world experience, innovative curriculum, and one-of-a-kind corporate immersion courses, our students are equipped to successfully complete complex research and writing projects, and they are eager to put their skills to use in corporate legal departments.

- At Safeco, interns completed multi-state research projects and developed compliance templates.
- At Amazon, interns reviewed licensing agreements, vendor contracts and interacted directly with business employees.
- At BitTitan, students assisted engineering teams by performing protected information risk assessments and researching international privacy issues.

At many large corporations and emerging companies, students have prepared training materials, drafted memoranda, and assisted with review of SEC filings and legal audits. Legal interns do not expect permanent employment, but they do hope to gain valuable experience.

We understand that some in-house departments may not have a regular hiring program, so we are committed to making this an easy process for you. We can collect resumes, post and promote positions, and help connect you with the right student for your project.
